Mechanics are from Mars, nurses are from Venus

Many RRC programs divided along sex lines

By Vincent Pearase

The women's lib movement is over 30 years old, but gender imbalances still persist in many occupations. This is plain to see in enrollment figures from our own college.

Many RRC programs have completely male or female enrollment. Dental Assisting, for example, is 100 per cent female, while Heavy Duty Equipment Mechanic is 100 per cent male.

Chad Stuart, one of only seven males in the Joint Baccalaureate Nursing Program, scoffs at the notion of gender balance in nursing. "Gender balance? There isn't any, not in nursing," Stuart said. "Nursing is still thought of as a female profession."

Stuart isn't complaining however. He and classmate Mike Taylor said they both like being among only a handful of men in their class.

Taylor said his choice to enter nursing did raise a few eyebrows, especially among his male friends, but overall his experience in an almost all-female class has been "real positive."

"I find it's not as competitive. Women are more supportive of each other," he said.

Taylor said he got into nursing because he was interested in becoming a health care professional, but he didn't want to have to go through medical school.

First year Automotive Technology student Kyle Hillier said where he studies, Building M, has only a handful of women students.

Hillier said he doesn't see any reasons why there can't be more women in the automotive trades. "I don't know why there aren't more women mechanics. I have no problem with it," he said.

Hillier said society is slowly breaking down old stereotypical roles for men and women. "Nearly all secretaries used to be women, but that's changing. The last shop I worked at there were a fair amount of men doing office work," he said. "Gender roles are breaking down."

Final figures for the 1999-2000 school year aren't yet available, but figures from last year show in Industrial Technology, which includes programs such as Welding, Applied Plumbing and Automotive Technician, had a substantial majority of male students. Conversely, women dominate programs such as Animal Health Technology, Child and Youth Care and Dental Assisting.

Other programs, such as Creative Communications and Business Administration have a roughly equal number of male and female students.

Similar trends are evident in community colleges across Canada. In 1995-96, the last year in which statistics are available, Stats Can reported there were 13,510 men and only 2,734 women in engineering and applied sciences. In health sciences there were 9,352 women compared to 2,276 men.

University of Winnipeg sociology professor Doreen Smith said the persistence of traditional gender roles shows the powerful effect of socialization.

She said some male dominated professions are known to have "chilly climate," and aren't very welcoming or accommodating to women. A chilly climate is a workplace environment where forms of discrimination are allowed to thrive and where sexist, racist or homophobic comments are permitted.

"Certain occupations are not all that female friendly. In some recent studies, it has been shown that females are espousing the ideology of equality, but they still aren't personally identifying with (male-dominated) areas as potential occupations. This is perhaps partly due to a lack of role models," Smith said.

Smith disputes the idea that women have innate qualities that make them better qualified for the so-called "caring professions," such as nursing and child care. "If men are given the opportunity, they can take on the caregiving roles as well as females," she said.

Smith's colleague at the U of W sociology department, Professor Sandi Kirby, is optimistic that society is moving towards greater gender equality.

Health centre condoms waste of money?

It's great that Red River College is able to waste my money on free condoms for students who can't keep their pants on. Students continually complain that post-secondary education is too expensive, then they worship programs and facilities that waste their money.

Nobody at Red River is under 18. Supposedly we are all responsible adults. If this is the case, then why are these adults too chicken to enter a drugstore and purchase their own condoms?

It's not like condoms are hard to find, and they certainly aren't that expensive. In addition, providing students with information is meaningless since it most likely isn't accurate and if the student is ignorant enough to "put out", they obviously aren't intelligent enough to understand any information provided.

Our tax dollars already fund a plethora of organizations and resources designed to provide information to sexually active individuals (Whether that information is accurate and comprehensive is another story).

I don't care what risk other people choose to take with their lives, but I am completely against my money supporting it. Giving out free condoms to irresponsible students is a slap in the face to those responsible students who attend college to learn, not get laid.

"Bitch & Bastard" column rude and insulting

Let me think about this for a second. Ah...yes that's right, Uzo Amajor's article in the October 25 issue of the Projector, disobeyed the first rule of journalism – don't make assumptions. Consider his words, "Get this – now female teenagers will walk around expecting guys to pay for everything, and a display of affection will be measured by the amount of cash lavished upon them." What an assumption to make about women. Does he really think that lyrics from such songs by Destiny's Child: "Can you pay my bills...my telephone bills..." and TLC: "I don't want no scrubs," are going to change young women's thinking patterns and turn them into materialistic and self-centered people? I don't think so.

In my opinion, TLC and Destiny's Child have written better songs, but Amajor's assumption about how a woman's character can be easily manipulated by such lyrics is an insult to any mature young woman.

If any concerns are to be addressed, then let's address the issue of song lyrics written by musical groups Next and Genuine. These lyrics are full of sexual connotations and leave the possibility open for young men to be influenced by their favorite male artists. For example, listen to Next: "I wonder if she can tell if I'm hard right now...don't stop now..." and my personal favorite, Genuine: "I'm just a bachelor - looking for a partner - someone who knows how to ride... If you're horny - let's do it - ride it - my pony - my saddle's waiting...come on jump on it..." In my opinion, it seems these role models have sex on the brain. Their young male audience is left with the impression that women are sexual toys to be played with.

Has this issue gone too far? - Maybe. But in all fairness, music is an expression of the times and artists. If Amajor's article had been about the need for all artists to be responsible and display proper role model attributes, then I would agree with his concerns. But his unfounded assumption that women are cash and materialistic bitches is rude and insulting. Women and their love cannot be bought, and as for his statement, "Guys will be on the prowl with a month's savings trying to get some action," - any man who needs to spend a month's wages to get some action needs more than sex, he needs mental help. Besides, hookers are available at a cheaper rate.

Are you afraid of the dark?

Students and staff not using Safe Walk as much as they should be, says RRC security

By Shamona Harnett

It's 2 a.m. You're at Red River College studying for a final exam in some dark, isolated corner of the campus and it's time to head home.

You hesitate, worrying about the long, lonely trek to the parking lot.

Your heart pounds as you walk to your car; you think you hear footsteps behind you. 'Is someone following me?,' you wonder.

Safe Walk, an escort service staffed by paid student officers, was put into place five years ago to protect students, staff and visitors of the college from unsafe situations such as this one. It is funded jointly by the college and the students' association.

Jim Drever, RRC security manager, says students and staff aren't using Safe Walk as much as they should be.

"Students may feel they don't want a 'babysitter' walking them to their cars," he says. "There's sort of an image thing happening in which students, especially male students, may not think it's appropriate or macho to ask for an escort to walk them to their cars. It's unfortunate that people feel this way."

Nevertheless, Drever says RRC has a relatively low crime rate compared to University of Winnipeg and University of Manitoba, a fact likely attributed to RRC's out-of-the-way location. He says there's an average of about two crimes a week at the college, most theft related.

However, one serious crime occurred a year and a half ago, in which a female student was attacked in the college's west parking lot. According to Drever, the student wasn't injured and was able to knock the attacker to the ground and run into the college.

"I don't recommend anyone take this type of action. You have to avoid taking any kind of physical aggression against an attacker," he says. "You don't know what kind of individual you're dealing with, or if they have any weapons with them."

Safe Walk is available 24-hours-a-day, seven days a week. Safe Walk staff can be reached by picking up any of the 18 Safe Walk phones located on campus. With staff stationed in the east, west and central areas of the campus, response time is usually two minutes or less. Student officers wear red jackets and are equipped with radios which are connected to other security staff.

Rather than risking your safety, Drever says it's best to request a Safe Walk escort, even if you're only slightly uncomfortable about walking on campus alone.

"If you're feeling uncomfortable in any way, call Safe Walk. That's what we're here for, whether you need an escort, medical help or assistance of any kind," he says.

"I would hate for anybody to run into trouble, especially when Safe Walk is here, willing to help."

Your own bodyguard is only a phone call away.

Access 2000 Education Is a right!

ACCESS 2000 CAMPAIGN TO HIT RED RIVER CAMPUS

Facts to Chew On

There are over one million full-time students in Canada. What would happen if all those students would work together for one common cause. Not very likely, you say? Well, that's exactly what Canada's Federal and the Provincial governments hope you believe.

When students work together, amazing things can be accomplished.

- Fact: As a result of student strikes in the 1960's in Quebec, the provincial government was prompted to freeze tuition fees for 20 years.
- Fact: More recently, the British Columbia, Quebec, and Newfoundland governments have all frozen tuition fees due to pressure from student groups lobbying for more affordable education.

Access 2000 is an initiative by the Canadian Federation of Students. The goal of this campaign is to persuade the Federal government to make education more accessible to all students. The CFS is offering four solutions to this issue:

- Restore $3.7 billion in federal transfer payments for higher education.
- Implement a strategy to progressively reduce tuition fees.
- Implement a comprehensive needs-based national grants program.
- Set minimum national standards for quality, accessibility and portability.

As the representatives of students at Red River College, the Students' Association will be actively promoting the Access 2000 Campaign on campus. The SA can not make much of an impact without the support of the students on campus though.

So, how can you get involved?

Talk with your friends. If you hear about an Access 2000 event, invite your friends along. Numbers do matter.

Read the posters which will be going up around campus and pick up the information pamphlets available at the SA office. Getting informed about the problem is the first step to solving it.

Wear an "education is a right" pin, available at the SA office, to show your support of this campaign.

Pick up a "do the right thing" postcard at the SA office, sign it, and throw it in a mailbox. Postage is not required, so all it takes is a few minutes of your time.

Although the RRC SA is not a member organization of the CFS, we would still like to get students involved with this campaign. Keep an eye out for future Access 2000 events on campus and around Winnipeg.

Used textbook dilemma

Buyback vs. consignment: what's best for students?

By Theresa Seraphim

At the end of a term-or if you've ever dropped out of a course-you're usually faced with the dilemma of what to do with all those textbooks you don't need anymore. There are two options available at Red River: wait until the next buyback at the Bookstore, or get the staff of the Ox to sell them for you on consignment.

The first option just took place at the bookstore. From Nov. 17 to 19, representatives of Follett, a Nebraska-based book company, were available to take those unneeded tomes off your hands-for instant money, no less.

"The advantage over consignment is that the student gets the cash right up front," said Eileen Zuke, bookstore manager.

Follett representatives have come four times a year for the past three years, said Zuke. It's the only company the college has ever used for buybacks.

Since many instructors tend to switch textbook editions as soon as a new one is out, Follett will accept only current editions, said Zuke. The percentage of the original price a student gets back will "depend on whether (the book is) being used in our bookstore or if it's being purchased and Follett will use it elsewhere," Zuke said. If the book ends up being sold here, the student will get about 50 per cent of the price back. If Follett uses it in another place, the percentage will depend on the representatives.

> "There is no advantage or disadvantage to either buybacks or consignment."
>
> -- Todd Buchanan
> Ox manager

Zuke said she wasn't sure what percentage of people have their books accepted for buyback and what percentage don't. "We're not physically standing at the table," she said.

Todd Buchanan, manager of the Ox, said there is no advantage or disadvantage to either buybacks or consignment. "If you want your money quickly, then buyback's the way to go," Buchanan said. Those willing to wait until the book sells can choose consignment.

Buchanan said that with consignment, students set the price at which books will sell, so they know how much money to expect. It also offers the ability to bring books in any time, rather than at particular (buyback) times.

The Ox has "never done a buyback," said Buchanan, adding the school pays $10,000-$12,000 for each Follett visit. Buchanan said the Ox could buy back books, but because the store doesn't have a list of books instructors are using, there's no guarantee the old textbooks would sell.

He said he's heard praise for both systems from students. Some "like the idea that they can get cash back" immediately, while others are fond of being able to name-and get-their own price.

"You get people on both sides."

Car thieves prey on RRC

GMC trucks targeted, security stepping up patrols

By Vincent Pearase

Car thieves have struck Red River College once again. Five vehicles were stolen in the month of November— one from the NW lot, and four from 4N. According to RRC Security Chief Jim Drever, the thieves appear to be targeting GMC trucks.

To address the problem, Drever has temporarily hired an extra security guard who will do nothing but patrol the parking lots. A new security camera is also being installed on Building M to cover the NE lot, which should be operational by the end of November, and 12 additional signs are being installed around the parking lots that warn thieves of the presence of cameras.

Sgt. Kashuba with the Winnipeg Police Stolen Auto Unit said most vehicles stolen in Winnipeg are used for joyriding, and the thieves are relatively unsophisticated. "In most cases we are dealing with people using very few tools. Most cars can be broken into and started with just a screwdriver," he said.

To avoid having your own car stolen, Kashuba recommends investing in an anti-theft device. "It can be a car alarm, or an steering wheel locking device. We get very few cars stolen with The Club on the wheel."

Despite the recent rash of auto thefts at RRC, this year will likely see another decrease in auto thefts in Winnipeg, Kashuba said. 1997-98 saw a 6 per cent decrease in the number of stolen vehicles.

The mystery students of RRC

General studies program can be road to success

By Kyla Duncan

You've probably seen them, those mysterious students who only come to one or two of your classes. You might wonder who they are and why they are there. They are the goal oriented General Studies students, who are using the General Studies program as an avenue to bigger and better things.

The General Studies program, in its fourth year of operation, boasts high success rates for helping struggling students meet their goals. Despite a small enrollment number of about 20 students per term, General Studies seems to be the road to success. The program lets students choose from a variety of courses from different programs at Red River College, allowing them to get different tastes of what the college has to offer.

Pat Zwolak-Ross, program officer in charge of the General Studies program, says all the students who have been enrolled in the program are using General Studies to help them improve their marks and get a head start on the different programs the students are really after.

"We are getting more students more sure of what they want to do and are using General Studies as not so much for exploration, but for different purposes," says Zwolak-Ross.

General Studies boasts high success rates for helping struggling students meet their goals.

In fact, every single General Studies student who was enrolled in nursing courses last year got into the nursing program this year. Zwolak-Ross is amazed, but baffled about why these General Studies students were so successful.

"I don't know why that whole group was successful, whether it was just the luck of the draw or because they all had it clearly established in their minds that they wanted nursing. They were very successful, I'm really pleased with that," says Zwolak-Ross.

The nursing program was not the only one to open its arms to General Studies students this year. Animal Technology, Piping Trades, Hotel and Restaurant Administration, Electronic Engineering, Dental Assisting, Child and Youth Care and Creative Communications all have former General Studies students in their ranks.

Graham Borgfjord is a General Studies student currently taking classes from three different programs. Borgfjord says he is using the General Studies program to help him prepare for the Creative Communications program, which he would like to get into next year.

There's hope for Borgfjord. Two students currently in Creative Communications are former General Studies students.

Gender imbalances persist in many occupations

GENDER

"I'm not pessimistic, I think things can change. I think what we have done is change people's attitudes. More and more people are conscious of equality issues...but so far we haven't changed their behaviours. "

Kirby said discrimination towards women is still a problem in many occupations. "A friend of mine says the glass ceiling is there, but instead of calling it a glass ceiling she thinks of it as a thick layer of men," she jokes.

Kirby said a greater number of women attending colleges and universities will likely lead to an erosion of gender imbalances.

"Universities now have a majority of women students. With the big turnover in faculties, in the next five to ten years I think we are going to see quite an upset in that gender balance."

Another positive sign, according to Kirby, is the way women currently employed in male dominated fields reach out to other women. "What we're seeing now are groups of women organizing to help other women get into the sciences," she said.

Blood drive a resounding success

One hundred and twenty-six staff and students donated their blood in just over three hours at a blood donor clinic held at the South Gym on Nov. 10.

Students' Association VP Kevin Storey said he was pleased with the college's support of Canadian Blood Services (CBS), but would like the clinic to stay longer next time.

"The line-ups were huge. In the future we'd like to have them come for a few more hours," he said.

Storey, who "hates needles," said he will gladly donate again in February when the CBS Blood Donor Clinic returns to the RRC campus.

Lynda Cranston, chief executive officer of Canadian Blood Services, recently said Canadians donate less blood, per capita, than many other nations. She said only 3 per cent of Canadians between the ages of 17 and 61 donate blood compared to over 5 per cent of the populations of Australia, England and Sweden.

"Virtually all Canadians will need blood or blood products in their lifetime. Research has told us that if Canadians knew just how vital their gift of life is...they would donate blood. But we've never really told them the critical importance of their gift," Cranston said.

For information on how to donate blood, you can contact Canadian Blood Services at www.ifyouknew.com.

Escape from Winnipeg winter

With christmas break just around the corner, here're some travel tips for students heading for sun or ski

By Lorne Kletke

Taking a few precautionary steps can mean the difference between a great trip and a disaster.

• Check out current dangers of your specific destination at Foreign Affairs department website: www.dfait-maeci.gc.ca/travelreport/ menu_e.htm
•Read the Foreign Affairs' booklet, "Bon Voyage But..." available at travel agencies.
• Register your valuables before you travel with them at a Canadian customs office. Travel with as little jewelry as possible.

Money/insurance

• Buy travel insurance. Know what it does and doesn't cover..
• Change some money into the local currency before you depart. Keep a small amount of local currency easily accessible and apart from the majority of your money.
• Never pull out a large wad of cash in public.
• Use traveller's cheques and credit cards where possible. They provide additional insurance.
• Know the phone numbers to call to cancel your credit cards or traveller's cheques in case they're stolen. Keep the numbers separate from the cards and cheques.

In public

• Have a plan for when you arrive at the foreign airport. Use a hotel pick up or an airport limousine. Never take a taxi that seems just to be hanging around when there is a taxi queue available.
• Do not carry your passport around, leave it in the safe at your hotel. A photocopy will suffice if local law states that you need to have it on you.
• Try to look as if you know where you are going. Carrying maps around and looking perplexed shows you are from out of town, and may attract the wrong type of attention.
• Do not accept drinks from anybody you have just met. They may be laced with drugs. Never leave your drink unattended.

Medical

• Make your travel partners aware of your medical conditions, including allergies and medication you use.
• Trade names of prescription drugs vary from country to country. Know the pharmacological name of prescription drugs you take as well as dosages.
• Know what your medical conditions are called in the language of the country you are visiting.

Y2K

"No guarantees is our motto in the industry right now," says Theresa Flynn, Marlin travel consultant. Travelling around the new year poses additional risks:
• Most experts believe that very few countries will be unaffected by Y2K problems. Y2K may affect telecommunications, banking and government services such as power generation, medical care, visas, and entry and departure procedures.
• Flight cancellations, delays, unconfirmed bookings, and unannounced changes in scheduled services could occur. Discuss these possibilities with your travel agent and find out what services they will provide in the event of such problems.
• Telecommunications services may fail or may not be readily available due to excess demand. This may affect the ability of Canadian missions to provide services. Leave detailed itineraries with relatives and friends so they can be contacted in the event of an emergency.
• In some countries banking services, including use of credit and debit cards, may not be available on demand.
• Consult with your insurance company to establish your coverage in the event of Y2K-related problems. Some policies may include waivers of liability for such problems.

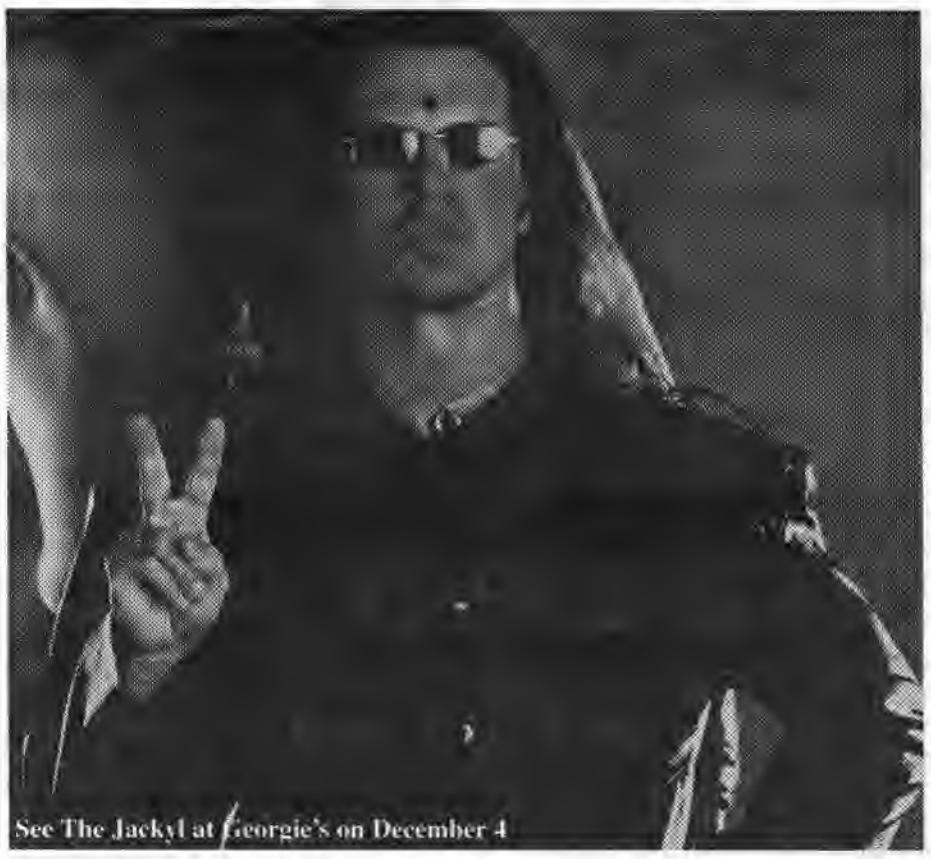
The Jackyl

RRC a glorified technical college: Jackyl

Former WWF star compares RRC to the U of M

By Kevin Engstrom



See The Jackyl at Georgie's on December 4

Kev: What job did you have before you broke into wrestling?
Don: I was a media relations person for a Conservative member of government.

Kev: Which member?
Don: Russ Dobie.

Kev: What made you decide to become a professional wrestler?
Don: I had no desire or intention to do it for a career. I just really liked doing it. It was a fun thing. I tried it initially just for fun and then, after three years and a year of working in the job that I just mentioned, I decided I could travel the world a little bit and maybe I could make a living at this. I like the fact that I'm not on the clock all the time and I'm not at a desk all day, and I kind of went from there.

Kev: What's the most bizarre place you've ever wrestled?
Don: Lebanon.

Kev: Any interesting stories to tell from your time there?
Don: Basically, yeah . . . I wrestled Abdullah the Butcher there. I got 18 stitches. We were kind of, in a sense, held hostage by the promoter for a couple of days, and there was some question as to whether we were going to get out of the country. So it was all pretty scary.

Kev: There were safety concerns?
Don: Oh yeah.

Kev: What do you consider to be the greatest accomplishment of your wrestling career?
Don: Earning a tremendous living from doing very little.

Kev: OK.
Don: I guess, on a more serious note, I had a goal to get to the World Wrestling Federation, and I did that. Then my goal became being able to earn a living in the wrestling business but not have to abuse my body, and I've made a segue into colour commentary.

Kev: Is it true that you just signed a contract with Extreme Championship Wrestling?
Don: Yes, that's true. I'm now under a contract agreement.

Kev: How long are you under contract for?
Don: Two years.

Kev: They're paying you well?
Don: Let's put it this way - I never think I'm getting what I'm worth.

Kev: Few do.
Don: I'm paid very well for what I do, especially in comparison to a lot of people in the real world who really work their asses off for less money than they should get.

Kev: What's it like working for Vince McMahon as opposed to ECW boss Paul Heyman?
Don: The WWF itself is very much first class in the sense that you go to a television taping and they've constructed a little city around the arena, and we had women to do the costumes, we had women to do the makeup and the hair - the whole thing. Its very much first rate. That's not to say that ECW is not, but ECW is much more of a relaxed atmosphere. I do my own hair in ECW, and that's probably a good thing. The real difference is that in the WWF there's a lot of backstage politics going on, and depending on what position on the card you hold, that can be a real drag - it can be a detriment to getting a break or moving forward.

Kev: You talked about politics holding people down on the card in the WWF. Who did that to you?
Don: I believe that I was thoroughly underutilized when I was there. I don't believe that anyone intentionally went out to try and keep me down. I don't think anybody really gave a damn enough to do that. I just think that, in my case, I was underutilized, and I think that one of my problems I've had throughout my career, and it's odd that you would call this a problem, is I'm literally one of the few people in this business who can do every job. I can wrestle - I've done that. I can manage - I've done that. I can write television - I've done that both here for the local promotion when I produced TV for us when we were in five provinces. Plus, I'm arguably one of the better colour commentators in the business so I can literally do every job.

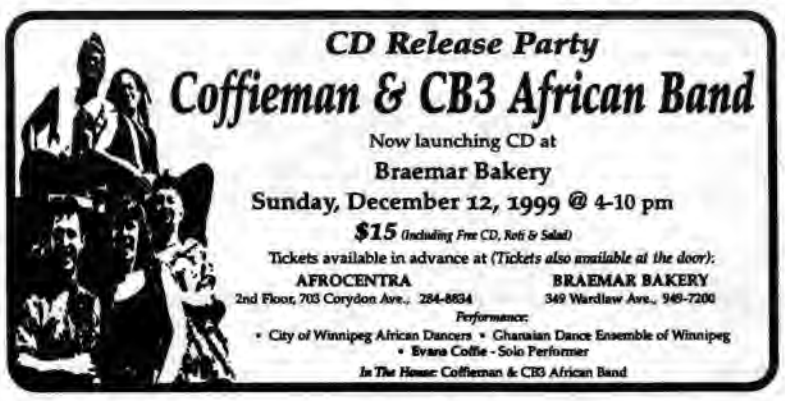
Kev: There have been rumours you're going to be taking over the ECW on TNN commentary spot . . .
Don: That's the rumour, and there's certainly a movement afoot in the back with the other wrestlers. All the boys in the locker room want me to do it because, of course, part of the job of a colour commentator is to get the talent over, and I make a real concerted effort to do a good job of that. That's the rumour on the Internet, it's what everyone says should happen, and it will happen, in my opinion.

Kev: Given that Chris Jericho is a Red River grad, are there any stories you can share about your partying days?
Don: I actually used to rib Chris, and this probably isn't going to get over too well with the Red River people, but I used to rib Chris because he'd say he's a college graduate and had a degree. I'd say, 'You don't have a degree.' Chris would say he had a degree - he got it from Red River. 'That's not like a degree,' I'd say. 'That's like a technical college - grade 13.' He'd get all hot. Of course, I went to the U of M. Chris hasn't lived here for a long time, but we get together every time he's in town. A couple of years ago we parked ourselves at the oyster bar at Earl's for about three hours and drank the bar right out of vodka that night, and then we found our ways down to Wise Guys. We both have long hair, of course, and some woman decided to play with our hair and said we had nice hair, so we weren't really paying much attention. Somehow she got it in her head that it would be cool to tie us together by our hair, which she did, which was pretty funny until we couldn't get loose. She had us tied together with the back of our hair.

Kev: Right. So who do you consider to be some of your best friends in the business?
Don: Chris, Lance Storm, Edge and Christian for sure, Rick Martel, Bad News Allen, Jerry Morrow - all those guys are real good friends of mine.

Kev: What's your favourite city to wrestle in?
Don: The most exciting place for me was the Winnipeg Arena because the people here are so familiar with me from being on IWA television for so long. I cut a promo here, and it was probably the most famous line I ever did on a promo for the people in Winnipeg. I had been talking about for years on IWA TV about how one day you people are going to have to pay big money to see me at the arena. Probably my most famous line that night was that I had grown up on the mean streets of Tuxedo. That was long before Shane McMahon was using, 'the mean streets of Greenwich,' and it was really funny because I used that line - "I pulled myself up from the mean streets of Tuxedo," and the whole arena - there was about 10,000 people there - burst out laughing.

Kev: Is there any chance of you ever going back to the WWF?
Don: Well, even Bret Hart says never say never, right? And he certainly has a lot less reason to go back there than I do. My stock answer to that is that I would go back to the WWF under the right circumstances. I would never go back there in the same spot that I was in the last time.



Upcoming tour caps off exciting year

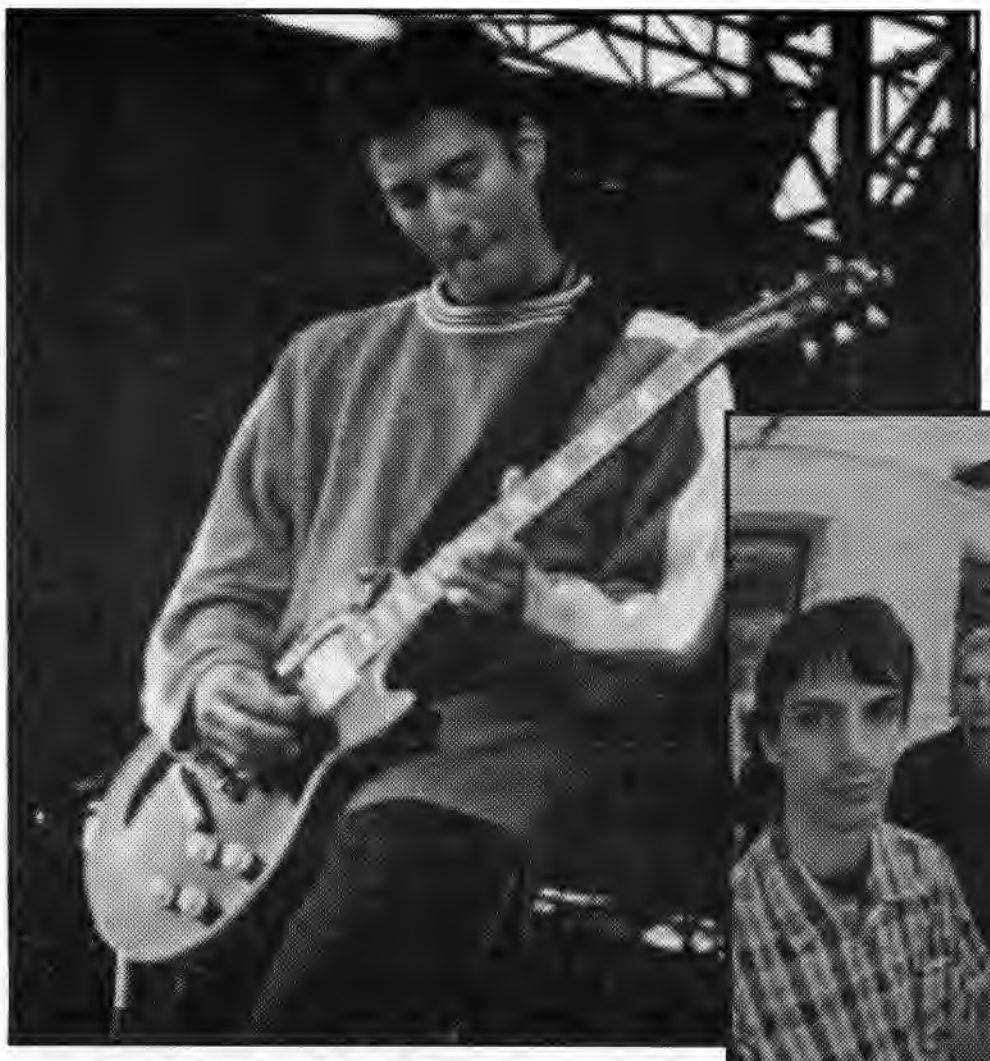
MGB'S Dave Genn Looks Back At '99

By Jamie Care

The Matthew Good Band is finally starting to get noticed.

The boys from Vancouver, who used to regularly be confused with the Dave Matthews Band, now have two platinum albums and a couple of number one videos under their belts.

On the heels of 1997's hugely successful underdogs, the band has released Beautiful Midnight, which went gold within 8 hours of its release.



Top: Dave Genn on guitar at a Edgefest
Right: Matthew Good Band plays in Winnipeg on December 8

Guitarist Dave Genn says the band's recent popularity has been quite a surprise.

"It's pretty exciting . . . (Beautiful Midnight) has performed better than expected."

Genn says while having a hit album is great, it's dangerous to pay too much attention to the charts.

"We really do make the records for ourselves," he adds.

The album is noticeably darker than underdogs.

"Underdogs was more straightforward," Genn says. "Beautiful Midnight is a little bit darker, more challenging, and more cohesive."

The video for "Hello Time Bomb" now sits at number one on the Much Music Countdown, a feat the band accomplished last year with "Apparitions."

"The video experience is very interesting," Genn says, adding the band has worked with director Bill Morrison on their last six videos.

"Bill's an old friend of the band."

Genn also says the band just finished working with Morrison on their next video, "Load me Up."

"Load Me Up was a hard video to make . . . it was very physical."

The past year has been quite a ride for the band. They picked up four nominations at the Juno Awards, and played the main stage on the Edgefest tour. But perhaps the biggest challenge came when bassist Geoff Lloyd left the band, saying he didn't think he was "getting any creative satisfaction out of it."

The band replaced Lloyd with Rich "Rock" Priske, formerly of DSK and Slye.

"Rich is rocking properly everyday!" says Genn, laughing. "He's a very easy guy to be around . . . he brings with him a lot of experience."

When asked about Priske's impact on the band, Genn says he "brings a different angle than Geoff," adding the band's chemistry is getting "better and better."

With that, Genn expressed the band's desire to play outside of Canada.

"Even though we have a good foot hold in Canada, we'd like to to dip our toes into other waters," he says.

In the next nine months, Genn expects Beautiful Midnight will be distributed in the States, as well as internationally.

All aspirations aside, the band is hitting the Trans-Canada with Moist and Gob on Nov. 29, and will pass through Winnipeg on Dec. 8 for a show at the Convention Centre.

When asked what we can expect to see, Genn laughs.

"You're going to see three fantastic bands, sweating it out on stage."

Matthew Good Band plays the Convention Centre on Dec. 8. Tickets are available through 780-SEAT and cost $28.50

Out, out! King Lear a mediocre production

By Adam Clayton

The Manitoba Theatre Centre is ringing out the millennium with a staging of Shakespeare's King Lear, and unfortunately, the production has its share of Y2K bugs.

Director Martha Henry's interpretation of the nearly 400-year-old tragedy is an occasionally baffling hodgepodge of modern art, contemporary sexuality, and devotion to the Bard's original.

Henry's vision is perhaps better suited to Hamlet: her production cannot decide whether to be or not to be, and straddles the fence between faithfulness and innovation.

King Lear, perhaps Shakespeare's darkest play, is the tale of an elderly king's descent into madness.

After turning the bulk of his fortune and property over to Regan and Goneril, his conniving daughters, the monarch (Paxton Whitehead) becomes little more than an unwanted houseguest, and suffers innumerable indignities at the hands of his children.

MTC is to be praised for sparing the audience from the increasingly tired practice of drastically tinkering with Shakespeare's works (think of Hollywood's last treatment of Romeo and Juliet). Thankfully, there are no drag queens or shoot-outs in Mexican slums to be found here.

That is not to say that this King Lear is short of fresh, even controversial takes on Shakespeare's script.

Henry's King Lear simply oozes coarse sexuality. Regan (Kristina Nicoll) and her husband lust for one another with a leering, groping intensity. Regan gets a sadistic thrill from watching him gouge a man's eyes out, writhing about in an orgasmic frenzy while the audience cringes. One character even thrusts his pelvis at the shocked and silent crowd.

While MTC's bold yet ultimately conventional interpretation is admirable, it is somewhat inconsistent with the set and costume design of John Pennoyer.

Pennoyer dresses his characters in a number of bizarre and incompatible costumes. Many of the players, including the king, alternate between Druid-like robes and Elizabethan garb. Others are dressed like Gypsies. And, for some reason, King Lear's entire entourage is dressed like voyageurs on a canoe trip to Upper Fort Garry.

Pennoyer's sets range from the columns of the ancient world to a giant, hideous steel structure in which Lear and his companions take shelter during a very realistic thunderstorm. This metal monstrosity is more confusing than anything else.

While the contrast between the outlandish costumes and the varied sets is clearly intentional, it is also somewhat distracting.

I spent several minutes trying to figure out why King Lear would surround himself with fur-traders from the Hudson's Bay Co., and left the theatre with a hunger for that meat-pie they make you eat on Voyageur Day when you're in French Immersion.

The acting, however, is top-notch. Nicoll gives an impassioned performance as the hot-blooded, cold-hearted Regan.

Alex Poch-Goldin is wonderfully wild as Edmund, the scheming, illegitimate son of the Duke of Gloucester. His mocking tones and blunt sexuality is riveting.

Former Tony-Award nominee Paxton Whitehead, who has had recurring roles on TV's Friends and Mad About You, portrays the tortured king with remarkable ease.

Stephen Russell as the Earl of Kent is also a standout.

King Lear is on until Dec. 11.

TOP EIGHT Signs You Are A Bad Mall Santa

1. You keep asking kids if they know anybody with some really wicked weed.

2. When kids babble on and on about what they want for Christmas, you say, "Santa's got a great gift idea for you: how about a nice warm cup of shut the hell up?!"

3. You make young children cry by retelling the horrors of the Liberal campaign in the last provincial election.

4. Keep yelling at children, "What's with all this 'gimme, gimme, gimme' stuff? Get a freakin' job, you deadbeat."

5. You smile and point at your scantily clad female elves every time you say, "Ho, ho, ho."

6. You post a sign beside your chair that reads, "Artificial hip, no fatties allowed - THIS MEANS YOU, BUTTERBALL."

7. Mall security is on your ass for relieving yourself on top of an Orange Julius stand.

8. Your name is Michael Jackson.

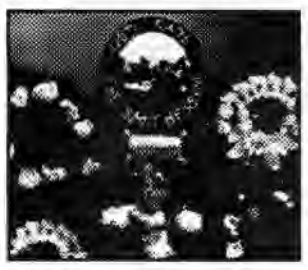
Music Reviews



The Smithereens
God Save

The Smithereens failed to impress me with their latest effort. 13 decent songs would be an achievement for a new band, but the Smithereens have been around for 20 years. Their new album has potential, but lacks any real punch. This CD would make a good gift for a sibling in his or her early 30s.

-Jeremy Brooks

Rating 6 out of ten. Favourable Tracks 1,9,11.

Marcy Playground
Shapeshifter

In Shapeshifter, Marcy Playground continues where they left off, presenting a moody yet lyrically compelling set. While never presenting a song at breakneck speed, Marcy Playground varies the tempo throughout, allowing listeners to enjoy themselves as they explore the stories the band weaves together.

-Kevin Engstrom

Cowboy Junkies
Rarities, B-sides and Slow, Sad Waltzes

Although still signed to Geffen, the Junkies released their latest through their private label, and it's a smooth little gem. The quiet, earnest charm of Margo Timmins' vocals can sooth even the most savage beast. A must-have for Junkies fans.

-Adam Clayton

Rating 8 out of ten. Favourable Tracks 1,3,2.

Soulwax
Much Against Everyone's Advice

Soulwax has produced a fantastic CD. These songs are unlike anything else I've heard lately: a real fusion of different sounds, like Beck is known for. Anyone who likes European bands like Radiohead or The Cardigans would enjoy this album as a Christmas gift.

-Jeremy Brooks

Rating 9 out of ten. Favourable Tracks 1-13.

Big Shiny Tunes 4
Various Artists

The fourth of the very sucessful Big Shiny Tunes compilation is very much like its predecessors. Somebody at Much has it in for bands like Econoline Crush and the Goo Goo Dolls who are among several making a repeat appearance. The album has all the hits on heavy rotation on local radio. Good for the trendy listener.

-Amber Saleem

Rating 7 out of ten. Favourable Tracks 4,7,13.

The Myth
Dream Harbour

Local band The Myth make their mark with an album full of witty lyrics and great vocals. Lead Singer/guitarist Todd Burnell and his wife Ruth Lindemeir's voices complement one another on each track, creating an upbeat folk sound. A great album to play when guests are over for a summertime beer and BBQ.

-Jeremy Brooks

Rating 8 out of ten. Favourable Tracks 1,4,10.

December daily observances

*Correction: The daily observances listed are not observed by all people. There are individual and family differences in what, and how the observances are celebrated. In last month's daily observances, it was brought to my attention that not all Irish people burn bonfires on Guy Fawkes Day. I apologize for any offence this generalization may have created.

Days that are asterisked() are the holiest and some may abstain from work.

Dec. 1- World AIDS Day

Dec. 2- International Day for the Abolition of Slavery (United Nations)

Dec. 3- International Day of Disabled Persons (United Nations)

Dec. 4- Hanukkah (Judaism)
More than 2,000 years ago, Jews were forbidden by a tyrannical Syrian King named Antiochus, to observe the Sabbath or study their religious text. In 167 BC, driven to desperation, the Jewish Maccabees rose up against Antiochus. It took three years of fighting, but eventually the Maccabees reclaimed the temple in Jerusalem. They cleansed and purified the temple, and rekindled the menorah, a candelabra that symbolized God's Divine Presence. Although it only held enough oil to burn for a single day, the menorah burned for eight days.

Dec. 5- St. Nicholas' Day (Christian)
He is the patron saint of Turkey and was a generous bishop in 4th century Turkey, known as a protector of children. This day is also celebrated by the Dutch, German, and Eastern European communities.

Dec. 9- Ramadan (Islam)
Commemorates the period during which Mohammed received divine revelations. A religious fast is held between the hours of sunrise and sunset during the entire month. Date may vary according to sighting of new moon.

Dec. 10- Human Rights Day (United Nations)

Dec. 12- Our Lady of Guadulupe (Mexico)
It is the greatest religious festival to commemorate the appearance of the Blessed Virgin to an Indian boy in 1531.

Dec. 13- Luciadeagen - St. Lucia's Day. (Sweden)
Also know as "Queen of Light". A candlestick parade takes place in her honour.

Aga Khan's Birthday (Ismaeli) He is the religious head of the Ismaeli sect.

Dec. 16- Posadas (Mexico)
Or the "Lodgings" begin today to recall the journey of Mary and Joseph to Bethlehem.

Dec. 22- Yule (Wicca)
During the winter solstice, the rebirth of the sun which is life sustaining is celebrated. The Yule tree is decorated with fruit and candles are lit to represent the sun.

Dec. 23- Joseph Smith's Birthday (Mormon)
He was the American Mormon Leader, founder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

Dec. 25- Christmas (Christian)
Celebrates Jesus Christ's birth almost 2,000 years ago. Customs day, the most widely observed Christian festival of the year. In most communities it is a family day.

Dec. 26- Boxing Day (Canada, Bahamas, Jamaica, U.K.)
It was once a day when boxes of gifts were given to those entitled to gratuities.

Kwanzaa (Afro-Canadian/American)
A professor who wanted to encourage blacks to celebrate their heritage started Kwanzaa's in California in 1966. Families exchange gifts and have African-style feasts. Seven-pronged candleholders are lit on each consecutive night for the seven principles: unity, self-determination, working together, sharing, purpose, creativity and faith.

Wren Day (Ireland)
Costumed Wren Boys go from house to house with a captured wren and sing songs and receive coins which go towards a feast in the evening.

Death of Prophet Zarathustrat (Zoroastrian)

Dec. 30- Rizal Day (Philippines)
Commemorates the death of Jose Mercado Rizal, a Philippine doctor and author whose books denounced Spanish administration. He was an inspiration to the Philippine nationalist movement.

Dec. 31- Hogmanay (Scotland)
Comes from the French phrase "to the mistletoe, the New Year". Scots bang pots and pans at midnight and bring bread, salt and coal to their hosts symbolizing life, hospitality and warmth.

Omisoka (Japan)
This is the time for stocktaking and payment of debts.

College Council Newsletter

What is College Council?

College Council provides a means through which the College staff and students may advise the Board of Governors on policy matters, and the College Management Committee (CMC) on operational and other matters:

- To promote the exchange of information and ideas between the College, staff and students;
- To consider ways of improving the delivery of programs and services by the College to the public;
- To consider College policies as they affect staff and students; and
- Consider methods to improve the operation of the College

Highlights from November 9,1999

College Day- Nov. 30,1999: Concerns were expressed regarding the closure of the Bookstore, Health Centre and Registration Department and a lost teaching day in Industrial Technologies. Jacqie Thatchuk responded by stating that college day is important enough to require all staff to participate. Bob Lechow added that Health Centre staff carry pagers in case of emergency and would be alerted by security.

Learning Outcomes- Maria Turner, Manager of Program Review & Development, presented information on learning outcomes and the process by which the college is moving toward a learning centered environment. To achieve this goal all stakeholders (students, faculty and employers) are invited to participate in workshops during November, December and January. Info: http://www.rrc.mb.ca/program/psdmain.htm

2000-2005 Strategic Plan- Jim Goho spoke to the committee about how the strategic plan is being developed. Red River College has a vision- to be a leader in post secondary education and training for the 21st century. The College has a dynamic and aggressive Plan to achieve that vision. As with all plans it is essential to review and renew the Plan based experience and new knowledge. All interested persons can submit ideas in writing to his office, D105, or email jgoho@rrc.mb.ca
